Concerned about granting area licence to Powercor

Concerned will change the relationship with landowners.

TCV – Because TCV is being sold it is not a fit and proper person to hold a licence.

The fit and proper person test should include consideration of whether the applicant's business practices are proper, as considered by stakeholders.

I do not consider TCV's practices have been proper because:

1. TCV did not inform landholders in the initial zones that it would be acquired
2. That information TCV is gathering may be commercialised

I do not see the need for TCV to hold a licence. The ultimate line builder will need a licence (or already have one – eg Ausnet). It seems TCV is seeking a licence to either add value in an acquisition and/or to truncate a process. I do not consider either of these a proper purpose.
