

There is a large gap between the 5c/kWh feed in tariff and the current retail prices of more than 23c/kWh; combine this with falling costs in battery storage solutions and this is making battery storage increasingly more viable with possible future disconnection from the grid.

Has the cost of consumers potentially moving to off grid storage been factored into the setting of the price?

Thanks

Phillip Reynolds

Keilor Downs