

Nik Legge

Addendum to previous submission

11/2/16

This is what your ESC counterparts in the USA (in sunny NEVADA) are doing to ordinary people trying to do the right thing by the world's environment. This comment is from a New York Times article ("Rooftop Solar Providers Face a Cloudier Future") yesterday:

In the meantime, solar customers in Nevada are left to grapple with a sudden gap between their budgets and their convictions.

"I feel kind of like I'm being penalized for making a choice for my family and the environment," said Kelly Schwarze, who just had his panels installed and was still waiting for the utility to give a final approval to switch them on. He and his wife had discussed trying to get out of the contract but they were unsure of the best way forward.

"I was quite proud of the fact that I was going solar because it kind of made me feel like I was doing my part."

But now, he said, "I feel like the black sheep in a way, like I'm some villain."